Intel predicts profit, sales growth to hit double digits

CHRONICLE NEWS SERVICES

Intel CEO Paul Otellini said Tuesday that the company's revenue and net income per share should see a percentage increase in the low double digits over the next few years because of rising demand for its chips in personal computers and other gadgets.

On both measures, Intel Corp.'s numbers have declined over the past two years as business spending on PCs and computer servers collapsed amid the recession. However, strong buying by bargain-hunting consumers has helped lift Intel's fortunes in recent quarters, and sales of server chips — some of Intel's most profitable products have improved.

Otellini told investors and financial analysts at a conference at Intel's

Intel CEO Paul Otellini paints a rosy picture of his company's future for investors and analysts.

Santa Clara headquarters that the forecast proves that PCs are "still a growth industry."

It's difficult to say, however, how the new guidance compares with analysts' expectations. Intel, whose chips run more than 80 percent of the world's PCs, will sell more semiconductors for server computers, data centers and mobile phones, and offer new processors for other products including televisions and security systems, Otellini said. Intel's ability to manufacture more advanced chips cheaply is putting it further ahead of the competition, he said.

'We've set ourselves up for very profitable growth," Otellini said in remarks to analysts. "Intel has a unique set of attributes that no one has."

Otellini's forecast was based on a "compound annual growth rate," a measure that includes multiple years of results. He did not specify the years.

Analysts polled by Thomson Reuters expected Intel's recovery from the downturn to show a 23 percent increase in revenue and a more than doubling of earnings per share in 2010 over the year before. For 2011, the analysts expected less-dramatic growth of a 5 percent increase in both revenue and earnings per share, compared with their 2010 forecasts.

FTC said to delay action on merger

BLOOMBERG NEWS

The Federal Trade Commission has delayed taking action on whether to challenge Google Inc.'s $750 million acquisition of AdMob Inc. to examine the practices of Apple Inc., a competitor, said two people familiar with the matter.

The agency received a two-week extension of its review from Google and AdMob so it could gauge the effect of Apple buying Quattro Wireless in January to compete with Mountain View's Google in the mobileadvertising market, one source said.

In particular, the FTC is concerned with conditions Cupertino's Apple is placing on software developers and advertisers for its iAd system, Google Inc., based in Mountain View, has purchased AdMob Inc. for $750 million, but federal regulators want to focus first on Apple Inc., a source says.

the two people said. Apple spokesman Steve Dowling declined to comment. Cecelia Prewett, an FTC spokeswoman, and Adam Kovacevich, a Google spokesman, also declined to comment.

The company introduced iAd last month in an attempt to help software developers generate revenue from the programs they create for Apple's iPhone, iPod Touch and iPad.

FTC staff members have urged filing an antitrust suit challenging Google's purchase of AdMob, according to three sources familiar with the matter.

The FTC signaled last month it was leaning toward the court challenge when it was disclosed the agency was seeking sworn declarations from Google's competitors and advertisers.

The agency's five commissioners ultimately will decide whether to challenge the acquisition.
